SUMMARY ANALYSIS

A limited liability company is a form of business entity where owners have limited personal liability for the debts and actions of the limited liability company, similar to a corporation, but management flexibility and flexible tax treatment, similar to a partnership. When a monetary judgment is entered against a member of a limited liability company, Florida law provides for a "charging order" that directs the limited liability company to pay profits and distributions intended for the judgment debtor to the judgment creditor. By entering a charging order, the judgment creditor is paid without disrupting management of the limited liability company.

The Florida Supreme Court recently held that Florida's statutory charging order provision is not the exclusive means by which a judgment creditor can execute a judgment against a debtor owning all of the interest in a single-member limited liability company. The court ordered the judgment debtor to surrender all right, title, and interest in the member's single-member limited liability company to satisfy an outstanding judgment.

This bill provides that Florida's charging order provision is the sole and exclusive means to satisfy a judgment from the judgment debtor's transferrable interest in a limited liability company with more than one member. The bill further provides that a charging order is not the exclusive remedy in cases involving a limited liability company with only one member. In cases involving a single-member limited liability company, a court may order other remedies if the creditor establishes that the judgment will not be satisfied within a reasonable period of time.

The fiscal impact of the bill on state and local governments is speculative. Some commenters believe that current law is discouraging business formation within the state and are concerned that the court's opinion will cause disruption within the business climate in Florida. It is not known whether significant costs will be incurred by limited liability companies that take action to deal with the court's opinion. Accordingly, it is not known whether this bill will reduce costs to Florida limited liability companies. The bill does not appear to impose additional costs on limited liability companies.

This bill takes effect upon becoming a law and applies retroactively.

I. SUBSTANTIVE ANALYSIS

A. EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGES:

Introduction

In Olmstead v. Federal Trade Commission, 44 So. 3d 76 (Fla. 2010), the Florida Supreme Court held that Florida's statutory charging order provision is not the exclusive means that a judgment creditor can execute a judgment against a single-member limited liability company and held that a court can order a judgment debtor to surrender all right, title, and interest in the member's single-member limited liability company to satisfy an outstanding judgment. While the court's holding does not specifically apply to limited liability companies with more than one member, the court's reasoning would likely apply to all limited liability companies. This bill provides that a charging order is the sole and exclusive means to satisfy a judgment from the judgment debtor's transferrable interest in a limited liability company with more than one member. The bill provides that the charging order is not the exclusive remedy in cases involving a limited liability company with only one member.

Limited Liability Companies

Sections 608.401-608.705, F.S., comprise the Florida Limited Liability Company Act ("LLC Act"). A limited liability company ("LLC") is a business entity where owners have limited personal liability for the debts and actions of the LLC, similar to a corporation, but management flexibility and flexible tax treatment, similar to a partnership. Owners of an LLC are called members. Florida law allows a single-member LLC. Ownership shares, often called "membership interests," "member's interest, or "interest," are considered personal property. A member's interest in an LLC may be assigned but the assignee's interest is generally limited to sharing in the profits and losses and receiving distributions from the LLC.¹ Generally, an assignee does not receive any rights relating to management of the LLC.² Section 608.433(1), F.S., provides that an assignee may become a member only if the other members consent, unless the operating agreement or articles of organization provide otherwise. An LLC may file as a corporation, a partnership, or a sole proprietorship for federal income tax purposes so the LLC business entity provides tax flexibility.³

According to the Florida Division of Corporations, there are 548,893 active LLCs in Florida.⁴ The number of LLC filings has generally increased over the last ten years. In 2000, 19,186 documents related to LLCs were filed with the Division of Corporations. In 2010, 138,287 such documents were filed with the Division.⁵

Enforcement of Judgments and Charging Orders

A judgment is an order of the court creating an obligation, such as a debt. Chapter 56, F.S., provides mechanisms for execution of judgments. Section 56.061, F.S., provides that "lands and tenements, goods and chattels, equities of redemption in real and personal property, and stock in corporations shall be subject to levy and sale upon execution." The statute allows a judgment creditor to take stock held by a judgment debtor to satisfy the judgment.

A charging order is an order directing the members of an LLC to pay a judgment debtor's share of the LLC profits or distributions to a judgment creditor. The judgment creditor is not involved in the management decisions of the LLC but merely collects the judgment debtor's share of profits or distributions.⁶ Florida has codified the charging order in the LLC Act. Section 608.433(4), Florida Statutes, provides:

On application to a court of competent jurisdiction by any judgment creditor of a member, the court may charge the limited liability company membership interest of the member with payment of the unsatisfied amount of the judgment with interest. To the extent so charged, the judgment creditor has only the rights of an assignee of such interest. This chapter does not deprive any member of the benefit of any exemption laws applicable to the member's interest.

The theory behind the charging order is that a judgment creditor can be paid from the profits or distributions from the LLC without the disruption of the business caused by inserting another member into the group or the damage caused to other members if the business, or portions of it, was sold to pay the judgment creditor.⁷ As a federal court has explained, "a charging order protects the autonomy of the original members, and their ability to manage their own enterprise."⁸ A limitation of the charging order remedy is that a creditor cannot recover unless the voting members of the LLC distribute profits. If the LLC does not make a distribution, the judgment creditor is not paid.

The charging order is not unique to the LLC business structure. Florida's Revised Uniform Partnership Act of 1995, ss. 620.81001 -620.9902, F.S., and Florida's Revised Uniform Limited Partnership Act of 2005, ss. 620.1101-620.2205, F.S., similarly provide charging order remedies in partnership and limited partnership law.

The Olmstead Decision

In Olmstead, a federal court asked the Florida Supreme Court whether, under Florida law, a court may order a judgment debtor to surrender all "right, title, and interest" in the debtor's single-member LLC to satisfy an outstanding judgment. In Olmstead, the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") alleged Olmstead was operating an "advance-fee credit card scam" and sued for unfair and deception trade practices.⁹ The FTC prevailed and obtained a order directing Olmstead to surrender all right, title, and interest in his LLC. Olmstead, the judgment debtor and sole member of an LLC, argued that a charging order under s. 608.433(4), F.S., was the sole and exclusive remedy available against his ownership interest in the LLC. He argued that no other remedy was applicable. The FTC argued that other remedies were available under Florida law and that the statutory charging order was not the sole remedy.¹⁰

The court held that a charging order under s. 608.433(4), F.S., was not the exclusive remedy. The court noted that s. 56.061, F.S., provides that stock in corporations is subject to sale and execution to satisfy a judgment and that because an LLC is "type of corporate entity," an ownership interest in an LLC is reasonably understood to be corporate stock and subject to execution under the statute.¹¹ The court rejected arguments that s. 608.433(4), F.S., displaced s. 56.061, F.S. It noted that Florida's partnership and limited partnership statutes contain similar charging order provisions but those provisions provide that the charging order is the exclusive remedy and that specific language relating to an exclusive remedy is not present in the LLC statute.¹² Accordingly, the court said:

Specifically, we conclude that there is no reasonable basis for inferring that the provision authorizing the use of charging orders under section 608.433(4) establishes the sole remedy for a judgment creditor against a judgment debtor's interest in a single-member

LLC... Section 608.433(4) does not displace the creditor's remedy available under section 56.061 with respect to a debtor's ownership interest in a single-member LLC.¹³

Criticism of Olmstead

In dissent, Justice Lewis argued that the majority opinion was rewriting the LLC Act to create a remedy not contemplated by the Legislature. He said that a reading of all of ch. 608, F.S., and not merely the provisions cited by the majority, makes clear that the LLC Act displaces ch. 56, F.S.¹⁴ Justice Lewis warned:

This is extremely important and has far-reaching impact because the principles used to ignore the LLC statutory language under the current factual circumstances apply with equal force to multimember LLC entities and, in essence, today's decision crushes a very important element for all LLCs in Florida. If the remedies available under the LLC Act do not apply here because the phrase "exclusive remedy" is not present, the same theories apply to multimember LLCs and render the assets of all LLCs vulnerable.¹⁵

Commenters argue that Olmstead will damage Florida's reputation as an attractive business entity jurisdiction:

This opinion [Olmstead], and the lack of coordination between it and the implied meaning of the statute, will reflect poorly on the state of Florida with reference to its reputation as an attractive business entity jurisdiction. Florida will be at a disadvantage because other jurisdictions, like Delaware and New York, are known for having sound legislative and court systems that provide commercial and trust clientele with a predictable business law environment.¹⁶

The authors explain the concern of some business law practitioners:

As a result of the dissenting opinion, many practitioners are concerned that a multiple-member Florida LLC arrangement may not provide charging order protection, although that is not what the majority held. As discussed below, there is a good chance that there will be legislative clarification of this court-created "uncertainty by implication." In the interim, advisors should alert their clients to the exposure and consider bifurcating Florida LLC membership interests into voting and nonvoting interests, converting Florida LLCs to limited partnerships or limited liability limited partnerships, moving Florida LLCs to jurisdictions that have a more stable charging order protection law, or implementing other divestment of management control strategies.¹⁷

Effect of Proposed Changes

This bill contains "whereas" clauses to express the Legislature's intent that Olmstead not apply to multimember LLCs. It provides that s. 608.433, F.S., is the "sole and exclusive remedy" by which a judgment creditor seeking enforce a judgment against a member or member's transferee may satisfy the judgment from the judgment debtor's transferrable interest in the LLC. All other remedies to give effect to the charging order are not available to the judgment creditor attempting to satisfy the judgment out of the judgment debtor's transferrable interest and may not be ordered by a court.

¹⁷ Id.

The bill provides a circumstance where a charging order will not be the sole and exclusive remedy. In the case of an LLC having only one member, this bill provides that s. 608.433, F.S., is not the sole and exclusive remedy if the judgment creditor can establish to the satisfaction of the court that distributions under a charging order will not satisfy a judgment within a reasonable time.

The bill contains language indicating that its provisions are clarifying and shall apply retroactively.

This bill takes effect upon become a law.

B. SECTION DIRECTORY:

Section 1 amends s. 608.433, F.S., relating to right of assignee to become member.

Section 2 indicates legislative intent that the bill apply retroactively.

Section 3 provides that the bill becomes effective upon becoming a law.

B. FISCAL IMPACT ON LOCAL GOVERNMENTS:

1. Revenues:

None.

2. Expenditures:

None.

C. DIRECT ECONOMIC IMPACT ON PRIVATE SECTOR:

D. FISCAL COMMENTS:

The fiscal impact of this bill is unknown and speculative. The Department of State has not completed its fiscal analysis. It is not clear how Florida LLCs are reacting to the Olmstead decision so it is not known how the bill will affect filings at the Division of Corporations. The fiscal impact on Florida LLCs is not known. It is not known how many, if any, LLCs would relocate or not locate in Florida because of Olmstead because of this bill. It is not known how many LLCs, if any, would incur additional costs due to changing legal status in response to Olmstead.

III. COMMENTS

A. CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES:

1. Applicability of Municipality/County Mandates Provision:

This bill does not appear to require counties or municipalities to take an action requiring the expenditure of funds, reduce the authority that counties or municipalities have to raise revenue in the aggregate, nor reduce the percentage of state tax shared with counties or municipalities.

2. Other:

This bill provides that it is intended to be clarifying and remedial and shall apply retroactively. Retroactive application of legislation can implicate the due process provisions of the Constitution.¹⁸ As a general matter, statutes which do not alter vested rights but relate only to remedies or procedure can be applied retroactively.¹⁹

The Florida Supreme Court has ruled that statutes enacted soon after a controversy over the meaning of legislation may be considered a legislative interpretation of the original law and not substantive change:

When, as occurred here, an amendment to a statute is enacted soon after controversies as to the interpretation of the original act arise, a court may consider that amendment as a legislative interpretation of the original law and not as a substantive change thereof. This Court has recognized the propriety of considering subsequent legislation in arriving at the proper interpretation of the prior statute.²⁰
